"I have just had opportunity to read your report concerning your connection and that of Capt. Gordon Johnston with the American Legion. I note therefrom that your personal participation of prints of the Library, and fills a number of large glass cases. The books of his library have, it is announced, recently been gathered together in one place to form a special collection, whereas they were formerly placed according to different classifications.

British Burned Library.

The Library of the United States was almost entirely wiped out when Gen. Ross fired the Capitol in 1814. Jefferson, a man of great and varied attainments and a deep student, possessed the finest library in the United States next to the one that had suffered from British depredations. He offered it to the government as a nucleus for a new library, and it was purchased for the sum of $23,950.

The exhibit begins with engravings of Jefferson by various exponents of stated in Secretary Garrison's letter to Gen. Wood, as follows:

"I have just had opportunity to read your report concerning your connection and that of Capt. Gordon Johnston with the American Legion. I note there from that your personal participation consisted of a general commendation of the proposition as stated to you, and the proposition as the proposition as the proposition as the proposition as the proposition and suggestion that your personal participation consisted of a general commendation of the proposition as stated to you, and the proposition as stated to you, and the proposition as the proposition a

The exhibit begins with engravings of Jefferson by various exponents of the French and German as well as the American schools. Of particular interest is a rare one by Henry Wolf after the portrait by Charles Wilson Peale and one made by Boucher-Desnoyers during the period of Jefferson's ambassadorship to France. A third, the only one in colors, is also rare, and is the result of the skill of Thaddeus Kosciusko, the Polish patriot. It is distinctly unflattering, but gives a most interesting profile view of the great statesman. The engravings also include representations of the monogram and coat-of-arms used by the third President.

They show exterior views of the house, the state dining room, the coffee urn used by Jefferson both in the White House and in Paris, the Louis XIV four-poster used by Martha Jefferson Randolph, the daughter; the concealed dumb waiters in the chimney piece of the dining hall and the table on which the great Virginian wrote the Declaration of Independence.

The leters give not only a very conwrote the Declaration of Independence.

The leters give not only a very complete account of the literary transaction, but a picture of the simplicity of the times, for embossed letter heads—or, in fact, letter heads of any description—for official letters are lacking and legible penmanship was evidently then considered one of the accomplishments of a gentleman. On view is the letter written by Jefferson to President Monroe offering the collection; one to William Thornton, architect of the Capitol, advising as to its housing, and one from Samuel H. Smith, editor of the National Intelligencer, to Jefferson regarding its packing and transportagarding its packing and transporta-

Of special interest is a volume of "The History of the World," by Sir Walter Raleigh, and Jefferson's own copy of the collections of essays, known as "The Federalist," and containing many annotations in his own hand. There is annotations in his own hand. There is a facsimile of "The Life and Morals of Jesus of Nazareth," extracted textually from the four gospels by Jefferson. These include only such texts as are the spoken words of Jesus, and appear in English, French, Greek and Latin. The original is in the National Museum. They may be said to form a sort of "condensed" gospel.

Talk at G. A. R. Hall.

All military organizations and the general public are invited to be present of G. A. R. Hall Monday evening, when Col. Thomas S. Crago, commander-inchief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and Adjt. Gen. Robert Woodside of Pittsburgh, Pa., are to deliver addresses. Col. Crago was returned as a member of the House of Representatives from Pennsylvania at the last lections. Both speakers will come to Washington for this occasion.

The meeting is to be under the auspices of Col. Frank B. McIntyre Post, No. 75, Veterans of Foreign Wars. Both men will touch upon the work of the armies of the Philippines, Cuba and Porto Rico, as well as the Chinese retief expedition. It is expected that music for the occasion will be furnished by a section of the Marine Band.
